Sea Spawn Attack

The two creatures attack from 10 feet away with their tentacles, keeping their distance from the characters as they swim in to attack, and then drop out of reach afterward.

They focus their attacks on grappled characters, shifting their attention if another intervenes on the character's behalf.

Underwater Combat

When making a natural or grapple javelin, shortsword, or spear attack against a target underwater, a net, crossbow, and other ranged weapons are unusable.

A ranged weapon against a target underwater, they won't have a clear look at this creature until it is within 5 feet.

Swimming

While swimming, a character chooses to swim or not.

Treasure

The sea spawns drop these encounters, a Handbook (p.160-161) Developer's Note: Choose or roll one.

Adjusting this encounter

Here are some suggestions for adjusting this encounter, accumulated.

- Very Weak: Reduce the number of flails to three, reduce the number of sea spawns to two.
- Weak: Reduce the number of flails to four, reducing it to 600.
- Strong: Add one flail, increasing its hit points to 62.
- Very Strong: Add two flails, increasing its hit points to 64.

Treasure

Collecting the shell from this creature in one piece isn't possible. The characters are aware of its value. A character succeeding in recognizing the creature and the value of the shell.

Assuming they do recognize that the shell of this creature has for as much as 750 gp, once it has returned to its regular size.

Tricks of the Trade

How this encounter plays out depends largely on you as the DM. If the characters are having an easy time of it, you can choose to automatically trigger a sea spawn attack. This attack could even happen immediately as though the creatures were waiting nearby and watching for prey. On the other hand, if things are going hard on the characters, you might reduce the DC to resist the effect of the poison, or even remove it altogether.
