All Vethathiri Maharishi - Alchetron, The Free Social EncyclopediaÂ .Q: How to tell whether or not my 240v AC power is induced or true I am driving a motor with 240v ac to do some light grinding. I have no load to speak of, but I'm curious to know if my power supply is "true" or is being induced by another device. I have a power meter with an amp of 0.5 on the mains line, and the load side is showing 40 amps. So it is true 240. However I'm also curious if the power at the load side is being returned through the source side. If so, I need to isolate the load and add inductors. If not, do nothing. Any thoughts? A: I have a power meter with an amp of 0.5 on the mains line, and the load side is showing 40 amps. So it is true 240. Any load on a 240V-bus has an amp-per-phase. For example, a 40A load will draw 1000W, or 0.2A per phase. However I'm also curious if the power at the load side is being returned through the source side. If so, I need to isolate the load and add inductors. If not, do nothing. This is your load centre. If it's getting + and -, then it is being load-fed by the power-supply. If it's getting just +, then it's being feeded by the power-supply. This is a simple RCD switch, which detects overcurrents and prevents the machine/motor from being damaged. Any thoughts? Well, if you have a power-distribution-board (PDB), which is in your case, you can check if the power has been overfed (it should not be) or if it is being feeded by the power-supply itself. If it says current on the load-side is 30 A, you need to contact your power-supply manufacturer and get a new PDB board. However, as the price of PDB boards has gone up, you might consider going with a simple grid-feed or a PDB board, instead

I'm trying to access it through /admin/config/system/accounts. I want to know the 'username','mail' and 'display name' values of the user account. How do I do this? I'm using drupal 6. A: Using FAPI functions from the FAPI module you can retrieve and manipulate user information using the following code: $account = user_load(1); // Load the user account used to save the configuration $name = $account->name; $mail = $account->mail; $account->field_1_value = NULL; // This line will change the value of field_1_value Once you have the desired user information, you can display it using the variable $name and $mail. A: Drupal 6 doesn't provide access to global user info through /admin/config/system/accounts. You'll have to use FAPI for that and make use of user_load: $account = user_load(1); or $account = user_load_by_mail(array('mail' =>'myemail@example.org')); z i s d i v i d e d
